February 12 Meeting: Ken Stewart, Diving With A Purpose, “The Guerrero Project & More”

From InDepth Magazine: “Ken Stewart has arguably done more for Black scuba divers over the last 45 years than most of us can even imagine.”

Born in New York City, he moved to Nashville, TN, in 1979, then retired. Along the way, he earned his Open Water certification in 1989 at age 44.

Ken has logged more than 1,000 dives since 1989.

Ken founded his NPO Diving With a Purpose in 2005. Today, at 79, his multiple benevolent programs focus on training more than 500 young Black and brown divers and more. He's been featured in NatGeo, ABC, CNN, NBC, the Washington Post, and Smithsonian.

Combining Maritime Archaeology & Veteran Divers.

Ken's flagship program is related to the Atlantic slave trade with 18 documented shipwrecks in six countries with 18,000 volunteer hours.

January Meeting Recap: IOFF, “Ocean Conservation: Inspiring Action Through Film and Photography”

Ana Blanco and Steve Peletz of the International Ocean Film Foundation shared a variety of ways that they're focused on ocean conservation, with short films, photography, internships, travel, magazines, and more.

The IOFF's mission since its launch in 2004 is to be the premier global platform for ocean literacy and education through independent film. Their mission is a world of healthy and productive oceans for the benefit of all.

Monterey Breakwater Dive, 1/25

A handful of MSC members – Niles, Ken, Virginia, and Mark — took a cold dip last weekend.

Niles wrote, “Sun came out right after we started diving, so very nice color. Clarity as reported, 20-30 feet easily in many places.

“Did the basic crawl along the breakwater. Lots of fish! Including many sheepsheads — one was quite large. Also saw a pretty big calico bass. Large sea stars were fairly abundant. And scallops!

“Nice, slow leisurely exploration. Very relaxing and revitalizing dive for the cold water divers in the club.”

The Wreck of The Guerrero Slave Ship.

In 2003, Ken was the Southern Region Representative for the National Black Scuba Divers (NABS) when he received a phone call about a documentary called "The Guerrero Project". It focused on the search for a pirate Spanish slave ship which sank off the Florida coast in 1827. It was carrying 561 Africans to Cuba; 41 who were entrapped in the ship's hold tragically drowned.

After that call from the director/producer, Karuna Eberl, looking for black divers she could interview for her documentary, Ken emailed many of his NABS brothers and sisters, beginning the correspondence with "Tired of the same old dives? Let's dive with a purpose!" That became his "A-Ha" moment.

The Guerrero Was One of About 35,00 Slave Ships.

These vessels brought nearly 12.5 million captive Africans to the Americas between the 15th and 19th centuries.

Of the estimated 500 to 1,000 ships that purportedly wrecked, only five have been found and of those, only two have been documented. This was one of them.

Join us on Wednesday, February 12th.

Ken will join us on Zoom that night starting at 7:00 Pacific Time. We hope to see you live in Sausalito or on Zoom for this event.

Christine Mittermeier Hopes You Read This

Virginia wrote: "I recently read an amazing book that was part of a crowdfunding campaign to support the photographic work of Christine Mittermeier's book entitled, 'Hope'. I could not put it down as I read her eloquent poetry which leaves you with a deep feeling to act, protect and love nature, the ocean, and all sentient beings.

"It's a stunning compilation of her 30 years of worldwide exploration and photographic documentation of our oceans, Indigenous people, and the beauty of our planet.

"Her husband, NatGeo photographer Paul Nicklin, runs SeaLegacy, an NPO for ocean conservation."

Check out the two links below: one is to SeaLegacy and one is to a video introducing Christine's book.
